HOUSEHOLD INVENTORY

Know what you have in your house.
Then see that your insurance is enough to protect the present value
of your goods.

Keep Fully Insured
at Today's Values!

How often do you buy new things? If you are like most people you are acquiring something new almost every week.

How much money do these new purchases represent in a year's time? If you bought them all at once you would be impressed with the cost but because you acquire them gradually you don't notice it.

Most families — particularly young couples — have a steady increase in the valuation of their household goods year after year. Few families have increased their insurance in proportion.

It is a good plan to estimate the present valuation of your household goods making reasonable deductions for depreciation and base your insurance on this value.

Adequate household furniture insurance costs so little that no one can afford to carry less than is really needed.
